LONDON, 1918

(Complete synopsis later)

In this Traveltalk, life in the metropolis of the world will be illustrated as it exists after four years of continuous war. Mr. Newman happened to be in London during one of the worst air raids, and by a series of remarkable photographs will show the effect of the German attempt to destroy the morale of the people. The part women have played will form an important feature of this Traveltalk. Sidewalk scenes and street life in the capital will be graphically illustrated. Most interesting are the comparisons between the days that were and London as it is.

WARTIME ENGLAND

(Complete synopsis later)

In Wartime England, Mr. Newman will illustrate how the British Empire has met its vital problems; how the labor question has been solved and the food supply maintained. He will conduct you through the great munition plants and illustrate how women are employed in building tanks and aeroplanes; how British women have become skilled mechanics; how women accustomed only to social life in former years are now performing the hardest kind of labor. Social barriers have been broken down. Great Britain knows no distinction between men and men and women and women.

Among the cities to be visited are Leeds, Bradford and York in England, as well as Glasgow and Edinburgh.
